Writing client-server applications, for even small databases, can be an expensive and frustrating experience. For small businesses, the cost often makes custom development prohibitive. Wouldn't it be great if there were a simple approach to writing client-server applications? Well, there is. Meet AppQuest.

AppQuest is a pre-programmed, dynamically generated user-interface, which provides for the rapid development and deployment of client-server database applications. By providing end-users with a pre-programmed, easy-to-use interface, AppQuest is an attractive, cost-effective alternative to conventional development methods, which typically involve the arduous and expensive process of designing, programming, and debugging user-interfaces.

AppQuest uses a proprietary configuration repository to store information about your relational database. From this repository, AppQuest is able to dynamically generate user-friendly data entry screens as well as deliver powerful searching functionality. Use the Ad-Hoc Query tool to filter, sort and aggregate data dynamically. Integrate BusinessObjects® and Microsoft Access reports through the AppQuest Designer administration tool.

Notes:

Dynamically generated data entry screens provide end-users with an intuitive data entry experience without sacrificing data integrity.

The primary benefit of AppQuest over traditional development methods is the dramatic reduction in the cost and turn-around-time of developing client-server database applications. For small-scale databases with 30 or fewer tables, you can expect to generate the entire user-interface in a few hours. Try that using conventional development methods.

app/quest

The configuration repository is the engine that drives the AppQuest interface. AppQuest Designer is an explorer-style administration tool that provides for easy maintenance of the configuration repository.

After creating a new project and defining a datasource, AppQuest Designer analyzes your relational database and creates default data entry screen definitions as well as numerous other configuration settings. These default settings can be modified at any time to enhance the AppQuest user interface.

As you expand the size and complexity of your database, simply refresh the configuration repository and the AppQuest interface will immediately display new entities and fields.

No programming is necessary.
